1. Technique no. 3 is about finding a stickler, so finding someone who's detail/demand/discount oriented and won't let you get away with the mistakes.
2. And more than finding someone who is really that person, the expert/guru/master for the language, It's more about starting/establishing/exploring the right sort of relationship.
3. Relationship with someone where they will correct you, where they will feel comfortable correcting and making sure you're getting to the spot/place/point you want it in the language.
4. But at the same time someone who will encourage/allow/inspire you to get things wrong and to make these mistakes in the first place.
5. And sticklers could be your teachers, your tutor, your friend, there could be someone on skype, on Craigslist. It doesn't matter/bother/count, you can find sticklers all over the place. And with the technology it becomes a lot easier to find them.
